A holiday in an English school.

These half-holiday walks were the great events of the week. The whole fifty boys started after dinner with one of the masters for Hazeldown, which was distant some mile or so from the school. Hezeldown measured some three miles round, and in the neighbourhood were several woods full of all kinds of birds and butterflies.

The master walked slowly round the down with such boys as liked to accompany him; the rest scattered in all directions, being only bound to appear again when the master had completed his walk, and accompany him home. They were forbidden, however, to go anywhere except on the down and into the woods; the village had been especially prohibited. Tom found on Hazeldown, for the first time, the beautiful little butterfly with golden spots on his wings, which he had never seen on his own downs.

The "Tom Brown's Schooldays", Hughes.
