had soon fuirle	The farmer and his sons were in the fields, busy harvesting. There were already several hours that they morked runder the scorching sun. Tather branch standing in the wag gon, a prong in the hand pitched the heavy out sheaves to one of his sons, who built a rick all near; more this rich grew, more it leaved towards. The waggon, but it was unimportant. Vather and son did lose their time chattering and nothing holse into the silence, only the rushing of the sheaves and some jest that they cochanged now and they shely had soon finished made finishing the rich; they stopped the work, and they went to the farm for milking the cour and refreshing themselves
