Version

The apricot tree

From a distance of about one hundred yards the boys stopped to admire the famous apricot tree, all green and pretty, very old and very big. It stood in the corner of Henderson's backyard. For ten years the boys of the neighbourhood had raided old man Henderson's apricot tree. In the broken-down house every spring Mr. Henderson had watched their coming with fascination and delight - always satisfying the boys by appearing at the last minute and scaring them away. Now in the house at a curtained window Mr. Henderson looked up from his book.

"Well, look at that" he said to himself. "Coming to steal apricots in March, in the dead (1) of winter. Look at them!" He peeped out at the boys again,
